FFS IMPACT: FACES OF WESTERN ANBAR

Salah, 38, Construction worker repairing Al Khoor bridge, Qaim. Rehabilitation of the bridge was completed by FFS.

"I can't tell you how much I love this job. I feel proud to be working on this project in my town, and when it finishes, I will feel a great sense of achievement."

Hadia, 38. Mother-of-ten and former cash-for-work employee, Qaim.

"My husband was arrested by ISIL three years ago and I have not seen him since. I accepted the work because I needed the money. It wasn't too difficult, and the most important thing is that we earned an income. I also enjoyed working with other women."

Bushra, 28, English teacher at Hatheen Primary School for Girls, Haditha. The school has been rehabilitated by FFS.

"My name means 'good news.' When we used to hear bombs going off, I would talk calmly to my students and try to make them feel safe. Now things are back to normal. We have water, electricity and food, and the children are excited to learn."

Khaled, 37, Iraqi Security Forces soldier patrolling Al Khoor Bridge, Qaim. The rehabilitation of the bridge was completed by FFS.

"Our job is to guard this bridge. Families need it to access critical services like healthcare and education; it's a vital connector. At the moment they use a small boat to get from one side to the other. But once the bridge has finished, people's lives will be much easier."
